

Corpus Christi Montessori School
822 Ayers Street
Corpus Christi, Texas 78404
www.cc-montessori.com

September 22, 2022

Dear CC Montessori Families,

Wow, time is flying by. Now, if we could just get a little cooler weather. Thank you for a wonderful turn out to our Blanket & Books Social event. We had some delicious pasta provided by our Middle School students and it was a joy to visit with our families.

Please sign up for a parent-teacher conference if you have not already met with your child's teacher. This is a mandatory expectation for all parents.

Parent observations begin next week. If you are interested in observing your child's classroom during work cycle, please contact the teacher so they can provide a date and time or sign up with Ms. Ada.

The end of our first nine weeks' cycle is on October 14th. Students will be normalized, and reports will be sent home with observations and progress. Please take some time to read The Joy of Reading to Children.

Have a wonderful weekend.

Ms. Cerise

Upcoming Events

- September 22 VB U/E Yorktown 4:45
VB M/S Yorktown 5:30
- September 24 Family picnic 11:30-12:45
M/S & U/E trip to the
CC Symphony 9:30-11:30
Last Day for Book Fair
- September 27 Parent & Family Engagement
Conference 8:30-2:00
- September 28 VB Annapolis UE 4:45/5:30
- September 30 MAST Board Meeting 12:15

Wish List

Veggie scraps for the chickens

We would love to have some listeners for our new readers. If you have some time, please sign up with Ms. Ada.

Graceful Parenting – by Eve M. Dreyfus M.D. Teach Empathy

Empathy is defined as experiencing the feelings and thoughts of another person and is a very important part of human relationships. Empathetic parents raise empathetic children. Teach your child to understand the ways others feel and think about things. Do this by considering concrete problems between your child and another person. Have your child imagine out loud how he or she would feel and act if he or she were that other person. A child who learns empathy will easily relate to and understand the world.

The Joy of Reading to Children

By Dane Peters

As a father, teacher, head of school, and now a grandfather, I have always loved reading to children. I read to my sons from birth and sustained this habit as they grew up. I saw the amazement in their eyes as I read; they were enthralled and totally immersed in the story. I knew reading to my sons would increase their vocabulary and their interest in reading, but there was also a selfish reason—it gave me great joy. In my work as a teacher and head of school, I also read to many students. Decades later, I continue to find venues to read to children, at my granddaughters' Montessori school and through United Way's K-Ready Readers program.

What I love most about reading to children is their uninhibited response when something does not play out correctly. For example, once, I was reading The Pout-Pout Fish to an Early Childhood class. I turned to the last page (or so I thought), ended the story, and smiled. Immediately, a 5-year-old raised her hand and said, "It seems to me that there is one more page to the book." With a know-it-all smile, I said, "Hmm, let's check to see." To everyone's delight, I did forget to turn to the very last page—the page that was essential to the fulfillment of the "pout-pout fish" and the book.

I have the most fun reading when I change my voice to fit a given character. For example, Sesame Street characters that my children and I followed 40 years ago—Elmo, the Count, Cookie Monster, and Grover—are now equally enjoyable to my grandchildren (ages 2, 4, and 6). They are mesmerized when I change the cadence and pitch of my voice to bring reality to the characters.

A favorite of Upper Elementary and Middle School students is the wonderful short story "The Lion Roared," by Virginia Eiseman. The characters in this classic story take on their own unique voices. The short story "The Lottery," by Shirley Jackson, or excerpts from the books Growing Up, by Russell Baker, or Just Mercy, by Bryan Stevenson, capture the attention of Middle School students, provoking a plethora of questions. Middle Schoolers also have great discussions about the stories or articles they choose to read and often challenge articles that run counter to their thinking.

This Photo by Unknown Author is licensed under CC BY-NC-ND

Aside from the pleasure gained from reading, research demonstrates that reading aloud increases children's vocabularies and improves reading comprehension in school. However, while 71 percent of parents with a college degree say they read aloud to their children every day, only 33 percent of those with a high school diploma or less do. In addition, Caucasian parents and married parents are more likely than others to read to their children daily (Miller, 2015).

At your local public library, bookstores, online book retailers, or websites such as Storyline Online and Just Books Read Aloud, you can find a wealth of good books to share. Recently, during a video chat with our 2-year-old granddaughter, my wife read Clifford the Big Red Dog out loud. Our granddaughter was transfixed by the pictures and story. Ah, the joy of reading aloud to children...and of grandparenting. DANE L. PETERS is a consultant to Montessori schools and a member of the Montessori Life Editorial Advisory Board. Contact him at danelp88@gmail.com, or visit his blog at daneseblog.blogspot.com.